No Boogie University

by

E.T.S.U. Department of Dance and Amateur Film Department

No Boogie University was a short video produced by East Tennessee State University in the early 1980's when breaking dancing had become popular with elementary Junior High School, High School students as well as college aged students. the theme of the video was a break-dancing team formed of all age groups called the “Uptown Express” they knew several dance moves and even invented some more. At No Boogie University break dancing was not condoned by faculty or the administration. But the Lively personalities and popularity went on to win the hearts and souls of the faculty and the administration.
